

Evaluating the jurisprudential wisdom of Judge C. G Weeramantry at the International Court of Justice as the echoing voice of Global South

Punsara Amarasinghe¹

¹ PhD Researcher, Institute of Law and Politics, Scuola Superiore Sant Anna, Pisa, Italy, punsaraprint10@gmail.com

ABSTRACT

This paper seeks to examine the contribution made by Sri Lankan judge C.G Weeramantry in the International Court of Justice during his tenure as a judge from a perspective of Global South. Contrary to the political realism which appears to be a predominant factor in ICJ, Judge Weeramantry made a great contribution in making a voice for third world countries. In particular, the universalist approach he maintained while delivering his judgment and advisory opinions at the International Court of Justice aptly indicated the need for a fair space in international law. This paper will demonstrate the overarching significance of Judge Weeramantry's jurisprudence in several chosen ICJ cases and advisory opinions as the alternative voice in a place where international law was dominated by power politics.

ARTICEL INFO

Keywords:

International Law; ICJ; Dissenting; Global South; Universalism.

How to cite:

Amarasinghe, P. (2020). Evaluating the jurisprudential wisdom of Judge C. G. Weeramantry at the International Court of Justice as the echoing voice of Global South. Musamus Law Review, 2(2), 66-75

Copyright © 2018 MuLaRev.
All rights reserved.

1. INTRODUCTION

Non-legal factors of judging on carving their judgments have received an enormous attention in the legal academia. The writings written by many jurists have shown a keen interest in describing the upbringing and personal reasoning of judges that paving the path for their judgments in the bench. American realism being a school opposed to Scandinavian realism places the role of judge as vitally important in the center of law making process and American realists further holds the importance of judge's personal upbringings cull the judgment. According to distinguished American jurist Justice Holmes "Life of law has always not been the logic, it is the experience."¹

Indeed, the personal ideology behind a jurist sharpens the legal acumen and the great saga of eminent Sri Lankan jurist and former vice president of the International Court of Justice Christopher Gregory Weeramantry provides some insightful evidence for the above mentioned realist argument. There have been dozens of appreciations and tributes to late judge Weeramantry since his timely departure in 2017, yet in this article we intend to seek judge Weeramantry's jurisprudence in the International Court of Justice from a perspective which stood as his sui generis value of being a jurist emerged from the Global South. As a different reading on the standard of our time, this paper would adopt three arguments. Firstly, we examine why and how judge Weeramantry opted for non-conventional attitude for his legal reasoning among rest of textualists in the ICJ and this article examines the rationale behind his jurisprudence at ICJ through two of his land mark advisory opinions. Secondly, we evaluate his contribution to public international law as the echoing voice of the Global South in the era of world hegemony for superiority. Thirdly we trace the universalist philosophy judge Weeramantry adored as the paragon of his judgments and advisory opinions, the references to civilizational values and the concept of humanity depicted in world religions frequently came from judges throughout his illustrious career at the International Court of Justice and beyond it had made judge Weeramantry an exceptional jurist.

In examining the jurisprudence adopted by judge Weeramantry during his days at the International Court of Justice as a judge and his Vice President, one needs to comprehend the time he grappled with his legal reasoning. The year judge Weeramantry entered the World Court in Hague 1991 marked the end of USSR, which saw the symbolic end of cold war giving its reward to the USA for becoming the unchallenged omnipotent political giant in the global system. However the world emerged after the cold war began to see a new set of challenges relating to the humanity, moreover the internal political chaos in post-colonial states in Africa, Other America and Asia crumbled off its citizens while it raised a question of the aftermath of colonialism. This was the general geo political atmosphere of the time Judge Weeramantry began his career at ICJ and this unstable situation and the power unbalanced loomed after cold war paved an apt path for justice Weermantry for activism in ICJ.

In terms of analyzing his dissenting opinions, his dissenting in advisory opinion on the legality of nuclear weapons in ICJ has left a hallmark legacy on his legal erudition as it was regarded to be an opinion of a judge who looked at international legal principles to nuclear weapons weapons from a different approach whereas rest of the judges in the bench took up the matter from taking the law in a positive positivist angle. More important Court's notion on the legality of nuclear weapons was centered on the UN charter as court found it that words drawn by Charter has not been weapon-specific. In its opinion Court states "the Charter neither express nor prohibits nor permits, the use of any specific weapons, including nuclear weapons." (Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 1996, p. 226, International Court of Justice (ICJ), 8 July 1996) In fact the task which was expecting from ICJ by asking its advisory opinion on the legality of nuclear weapons was transformed into a riddle when the court adopted too much cautious position in its approach to international law. ambivalent position held by the Court on the scope of nuclear weapons made rather a complex situation as they were over examined the scope of self-defense in UN charter, which finally led them to reach a conclusion that affirmed there is no legal prohibition in the use of nuclear weapons, but in examining the principles of international humanitarian law along with the issue of nuclear weapons court found that using nuclear weapons would contravene the principles affirmed by in ernational humanitarian law. However, the dilemma Court could not solve was that it left no specific remarks on the link between self-defense and use of nuclear weapons, especially the court's position would not provide a light in the extreme circumstance of choosing the principles of international humanitarian law and self- defense. This situation seems to have created a loophole for justifying the legality of nuclear weapons under self-defense for the sake of preserving states, but we think that in its implicit approach the court too has pointed out that using nuclear weapons is contrary to the law of armed conflict and international humanitarian law. However court deserves no admiration as it span the entire concept. Stefaan Smith and Kim Van der Borgh state.

¹ Oliver Holmes, The Essential Holmes: Selections from the letters, speeches and judicial opinions, University of Chicago Press, pp.139.

"The Court should have distinguished the ends from the means. The aim of the United Nations is "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, and to reaffirm the faith in fundamental human dignity and worth of the human person. The rules that are most adequate to achieve this goal are undoubtedly the rules of humanitarian law, rather than the concept of extreme self-defense States are only means of governing communities of peoples and facilitating the interaction between those communities and are never an end in themselves The Court should have priority to the objectives of the international community instead of favoring the survival of states "²

In the overall opinion of the ICJ, it seems to indicate that Court had not aptly unveil the international legal principles to ban nuclear weapons completely, yet it sought alternative compatibilities like complying with self-defense in a situation like existence of a state is completely at stake. However, from the four dissenting opinions of judges at ICJ, Judge Weeramantry's opinion took a unique approach as he displayed a complete opposition to using nuclear weapons and by all means he pointed out why nuclear weapons must be obliterated from human kind in his dissenting onion written in 96 pages. At outset of his dissent, Judge Weermantry has palpably shown in his regret on court's reluctance to ban using nuclear weapons at any circumstance. He states:³ "I regret that the Court has not held directly and categorically that the use or threat of use of the weapon is unlawful in all circumstances without exception. The Court should have so stated in a vigorous and forthright manner which would have settled this legal question now and forever."

² Smith, Stefan, Borough, Van Der. (1998). Legal and Moral Defects of Nuclear Deterrence, Peace and Conflict Studies Quarterly, John Hopkins University Press. pp.56-123.

³ Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 12, International Court of Justice (ICJ), 8 July 1996

2. METHOD

The research method used is Normative Research⁴ which is researching and analyzing legal rules relating to the protection of health workers.⁵ The method is optional for original research articles. This method is written in descriptive and should provide a statement regarding the methodology of the research. This method as much as possible to give an idea to the reader through the methods used. This Method are optional, only for original research articles. The author uses several approaches, namely: Approach to legislation (statute approach), conceptual approach, case approach.⁶

3. RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

3.1. The Jurisprudence Court of Judge C. G Weeramantry in the International Court of Justice.

Rereading Judge Weerant's dissenting opinion evokes us appreciate the humanism that he was struggling to uphold in ICJ throughout his career. His adamant position to ban nuclear weapons exclusively was not left a rhetoric filled with idealism, instead it was aptly bulwarked by his most descriptive argument in favor of banning nuclear weapons.

The organic view places people as individuals who live together in various life alliances based on genealogy (household, family), certain functions (economic, industrial), social strata (laborers, farmers, intellectuals) and other social institutions.⁷

The complexity arising from the distinction between the possession of nuclear weapons and the use of nuclear weapons created a situation in international law where states have relied on their own defensive arguments, which was pointed out by Judge Weeramantry as an outrageous position in international law.

His empathy on the clarifying a standard set of rules relating to the position of nuclear weapons in international law was primarily based on the historical depiction of how nations have not been able to comply with complete abandonment of nuclear weapons since the end of the Second World War.

His long dissenting opinion has given a considerable concern over describing the destructive nature of nuclear weapons and it would be interesting to examine that his dissent was the only dissenting in Court who is composed of much elaborative remarks on the nature and the destructive capabilities of nuclear weapons.

It is by no means an attempt to elucidate nuclear proliferation from a technical and scientific perspective yet, Weeramantry's approach to nuclear effects and the nature of nuclear weapons significantly help us to fathom the palpable reason for denial of nuclear weapons. Especially his concern over damage to the eco system caused by nuclear weapons has exposed a tip of the ice burg as it clearly shows the potentiality possessed by any nuclear weapon to obliterate the entire eco system on earth. On the

⁴ Fitri Pratiwi Rasyid. (2019). Relevance of Law Consumer Protection on Aircraft Post Master Flight Agent. Musamus Law Review, 2 (1), 50-65. <https://doi.org/10.35724/mularev.v2i1.2617>

⁵ Julianto Jover Jotam Kalalo, Chyntia Novita Kalalo (2018). Legal Protection Against Health Workers in Taking First Aid Medical Measures. Musamus Law Review, 1 (1), pp. 40-52

⁶ Lisa Mery. (2019). The Urgency of Radicalism Regulation in Legal Norms in Indonesia. Musamus Law Review, 2 (1), pp. 1-11. <https://doi.org/10.35724/mularev.v2i1.1216> other hand, the repercussion that can fall in the future generations in using nuclear weapons is another notable feature in Weeramantry's dissent.

⁷ Yusdar Yusdar. (2019). Accessibility of Persons with Disabilities in Realizing Elections with Integrity. Musamus Law Review, 1 (2), 105-114. <https://doi.org/10.35724/mularev.v1i2.1198>

Regarding that context, we believe the legal wisdom shown by Judge Weerantant was not merely confined to his interpretation of international law conventions and his reasoning was afoot to show how detrimental it can be before a larger nuclear cataclysm which can wipe out the generic system, eco system and every livable thing in the planet leading to the destruction of civilization and future generation who are yet to come. As a matter of fact such a moral concern was not taken up by other judges in their opinions of the International Court of Justice as they were primarily focused on developing their arguments under conventional international law understanding of nuclear weapons. The position of the majority of the judges in the Court was akin to the textual analysis of international law over nuclear weapons and nothing stood beyond it. However, in reassessing the futuristic arguments by Judge Weeramantry, it becomes one of his personal upbringing and the civilizational values bestowed on him has played a profound role.

The approach of Judge Weeramantry shows the intergenerational justice in his advisory opinion convinces us that the risk factors arising from nuclear weapons as devastating and the concern of Weeramantry stores a more specific root based on his ideal visionary to preserve the planet for future generation as a sustainable place. In his later writings too Judge Weeramantry showed a keen interest in developing intergenerational equity as a parallel doctrine to customary international law. His writings testify there is a rich array of principles of customary international law which can be used for this purpose. They need to be developed both individually and in combination with each other. For example the concepts of the right to life, the right to found a family, the rights of motherhood and childhood, human dignity, the integrity of the human person, the right to health, the right to food, the right to a pure environment, the duty not to cause irreparable damage to neighboring states, the precautionary principle, the concept of sustainable development, the concept of duties erga omnes, principles of individual responsibility, trustworthiness of earth resources, of intergenerational equity, of planetary responsibility and so forth.

His argument to maintain the intergenerational equity was strengthened very much by taking Article 8 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights implicitly applicable to future generations as a guiding shield. In his dissent the words written by Judge Weeramantry have a prophetic value as it stands as a plea for salving the conscience of the modern world.

He states:⁸

"The ideals of the United Nations Charter do not limit themselves to the present, for they look forward to the promotion of social progress and better standards of life, and they fix their vision, not only on the present, but on" succeeding generations ". This one factor of impairment of the environment over such a seemingly infinite time span would by itself be sufficient to call into operation the protective principles of international law which the Court, as the preeminent authority is empowered to state them, must necessarily apply."

However, the most interesting part of his dissent was his vehement opposition to legitimizing the right to use nuclear weapons when the very existence of a state is at stake. In this scenario, the rest of the judges in the International Court of Justice opted for Article 51 of the UN Charter that illustrates the "Self Defense" clause as evasive protection for nuclear weapons. As an example in reading the opinion of the Court on the legality of nuclear weapons, its president Mohammed Bedjaoui clearly condemned the nuclear weapons and its fatalistic nature for humanity, yet the opinion of the Court swiftly justified the right of any state to choose "deterrence" in accordance with Article 51 of UN Charter.

⁸ Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 67, International Court of Justice (ICJ), 8 July 1996

"The Court cannot lose sight of the fundamental right of every State to survival, and thus its right to resort to self-defense, in accordance with Article 51 of the [UN] Charter, when its survival is at stake. Nor can it ignore the ... "policy of deterrence."

The position held by Judge Weeramantry on the legality of nuclear weapons under self-defense was merely confined to what is the statutory obligation of Article 51 of UN Charter and while accepting the state's inherent right to self-defense he went on creating a clear distinction between use of force and using nuclear weapons under the shield of self-defense, later was pointed out by Judge Weeramantry as he stated

"The first point to be noted is that the use of force in self-defense (which is an undoubted right) is one thing and the use of nuclear weapons in self-defense is another. The permission granted by international law for the first does not embrace the second, which is subject to other governing principles as well "

Moreover he further mentioned the state subject to the first nuclear attack could be expected to launch a counter attack and these circumstances under enormous pressure both sides would fall to a stage of waging nuclear war and which was described by Judge as a "global catastrophe". His emphasis on self-defense was not a misleading principle that would legitimize nuclear weapons as Hobson's choice; yet, Judge Weeramantry was keen to trace the right of a state to defend itself by using the all available weapons for the purpose of repulsing the aggressor without violating the fundamental rules of warfare.

The dissenting opinion given by Judge Weeramantry in Hungary vs. Slovakia has shown another unique approach, which left a ponderable impact on international legal understanding of sustainable development and intergenerational equity. In fact the separate opinion given by justice Weeramantry in Hungary vs Slovakia seems to be a reflection on what the Court might have had in mind regarding applying sustainable development in international law. The case commonly known as Gabyykavo-Naggymaros evoked the attention towards describing the scope of right to development in international law. The phase of development itself is being a double edged sword created rather complicated situation, especially when the means and methods of development were not in compliance with certain standards preserving the environmental and humanistic principles. In the said case the concept of sustainable development was emphasized by Judge Weeramantry as a crucial factor to concern, in doing so, he vividly pointed out how the conceptual path of sustainable development entered the world discourse since 1970's and his analysis on sustainable development as a principle within international law and state responsibility that no state can entirely liberate from their responsibilities to the community. In his opinion Judge Weeramantry aptly showed the longest legacy of the concept of sustainable development traces its roots to ancient societies as a cardinal value of human existence. In his opinion he stated:⁹

"It is thus, the correct formulation of the right to development that the right does not exist in the absolute sense, but it is relatively always to its tolerance by the environment. The right to development is thus refined is clearly part of modern international law. It is compendiously referred to as sustainable development"

We need to understand, in the entire judgment of Hungary vs Slovakia, the concern on sustainable development as a static principle in international law was not discussed beyond the 140th paragraph and it was Weeramantry's separate dissenting opinion that unveiled the significance of the concept. In a judicial space surrounded by Westphalian attitude to state filled with positivism, Judge Weerant's own interpretation emerged from his broad vision towards international law based on universal humanity stood for the dissenting voice of Non-Eurocentric perspective of public international law.

Third World Approach to International Law (TWAAIL) has been a counter narrative emerged from the post-colonial states in Asia, Latin America and Africa as an intellectual movement, its task stands primarily in coping with the hegemonic rules created by the West in international law, both in practice and in academia. TWAAIL scholars have looked at international law from the perspective of the oppressed colonial nations which shows the modern saga of colonial construction of international law for the justification of colonial expansion since the 16th century onwards. Subduing the existing knowledge or practices outside Christian Europe as uncivilized, backward roots happened to be the crème de la crème achievement of modern colonial international law. In fact, TWAAIL pioneers from post-colonial states were much enthusiastic in critiquing this power hegemony in modern international law, yet their voices merely remained to be an academic discourse. Perhaps it would be justifiable to assess that Judge Weeramantry's stances before the issues he envisaged at ICJ echoed what TWAAIL scholars persuaded to discuss in their academic discourse albeit Weeramantry never appeared to be a stalwart of TWAAIL. In an Article written by A. Anghie and BS Chimni, the authors have named Judge Weeramantry as one of pioneering jurists of TWAAIL 1 and this recognition given to him by the international law scholars seem to be an acknowledgment on his audacity he showed in ICJ for providing viewpoints pertinent to the issues what exactly TWAAIL scholars were addressing as the issues laid in the peripheral level of international law. Especially in examining the concern given by Judge Weerant over budding concepts such as "Intergenerational Equity", that it is a known factor, international law or West are not particularly interested in pressing such issues as indispensable ones, rather that the kind of concepts are treated as whimsical ideals which can harm and sabotage achieving realist goals. For an example when the notion of intergenerational equity was emerging as a new discourse, its legitimacy was always subjected to the challenge as some scholars raised the question of what validity we had to assess and seek remedies for a generation that had not yet appeared to appear on earth. Such a pretext implicitly legitimized the right to exploit earth resources endlessly for material benefits of today's world. Also, neither ICJ nor international law academia genuinely attempted to trace the utter importance of duty based approach to future till Judge Weeramantry brought it to the stage through various his separate opinions.

⁹ Hungary / Slovakia, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1997, p. 53, para. 75

3.2. Judge Weeramantry's ideas in his contribution to modern international law.

We cannot confine his judicial vision or activism as a merit emerged from his own erudition, because it was certain that such altruistic actions were taken by him mainly sprang from the civilizational values he represented. Indeed, his role as a judge in ICJ was very much shaped and culled by the oriental wisdom he dearly practiced throughout his life. In examining how his deep associations with world religions and oriental culture aspired his judicial activism, his writings compiled by him after left ICJ have left us a greater clue to ascertain his deep devotion to all world religions as a path for universal pacifism.

He was not taken aback by the textualists around him at ICJ to shape his opinions, which were inspired by many communitarians and religious values beyond black letter law. As an example, his vehicle opposition to the legality of nuclear weapons was strengthened by some deep insights taken from the world of major religions. In his separate opinion Weeramantry has taken various instances of religious scriptures to prove his position beyond international law, which shows how ancients followed the rules of war without annihilating the whole enemy.

Weeramantry took the ancient Indian epic Ramayana to prove how its hero Prince Rama impeded his army from launching a destructive weapon that could uproot not only his enemy King Ravana, but his whole country too, in Rama's justification to oppose launching such an attack, Rama states

"Because such destruction of the masses was forbidden by the ancient laws of war, even though Ravana was fighting an unjust war with an unrighteous objective"¹⁰

His ideas on global trust and peace were mainly attributed to his deep reading of world major religions and cultures. In his separate opinion in Hungary vs. Slovakia, Judge Weeramantry unveiled a bit of history of the vast hydraulic civilization existed in ancient Sri Lanka as a pragmatic example of how sustainable development and the principle of trust have been bloomed in past. The sermon preached by Arahant Mihindu to Sri Lankan king Tissa (around 237 B.C) on Buddhist understanding of governance was quoted by Judge Weeramantry at his separate opinion of Hungary vs Slovakia as an illustration of sustainable development and trustworthiness. He states

"This sermon, which indeed contained the first principle of modern environmental law - the principle of trust of the resources of the earth caused the king to start sanctions for wild animals - a concept which continued to be respected for over twenty centuries. The traditional legal system's protection of saunas and flora, based on this Buddhist teaching, extended well into the eighteenth century."¹¹

The notion of applying universalism in the International Court of Justice for complicated legal disputes among state parties was not a wise decision for any judge to reach his conclusions, yet Judge Weeramantry was keen in opting for his own approaches based on his profound understanding of humanity. But this idealistic approach to legal issues from various non-perspectives did not allow legal acumen from the pivotal issues he envisaged as a judge and indeed, his approaches elaborating the factual reasons, history, and civilizational values were all assimilated into the legal reasoning in a sharp way. As we discussed above his flair for intergenerational justice was not entirely emerged out of the blue with philosophical whims, but it was fortified by solid legal arguments as well. As an example in Maritime Delimitation in the Area Between Green / and Jan Mayen Case, Judge Weeramantry noted in his separate opinion that "respect for these elemental constituents of the inheritance if succeeding generations dictated rules and attitude based on a concept of an equitable sharing which was both horizontal in regard to the present generation and vertical for the benefits of generations yet to come".¹² Having stated that, Judge Weerantant admitted that the notion of intergenerational equity has reached the stage to include in customary international law as he found several international treaties and juristic opinions affirmed the application of intergenerational justice.

¹⁰ ibid

¹¹ Hungary / Slovakia, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1997, p. 90

The illustrations he applied in his separate opinions at ICJ did not exclusively make him a legal populist stood for the interests and aspirations of the Global South as his views on the development of modern international law mainly opted for bringing universalistic values. It would not be an exaggeration to state that vision from international law was very much akin to make global citizens. Despite knowing the fragile nature of international law before state actors and power politics, his static position of international law as the ideal path for peace and order of the chaotic world was based on his indomitable faith of that international law should embrace cultural religious pluralism from world civilizations to face the greater interests in the 21st century rather than dwelling in its inglorious colonial past comes from Westphalian nation state system in Europe.

In his writing "Universalizing International Law", Weeramantry pointed out the significance of Article 9 of ICJ statute which states the body of judges in ICJ should represent all major legal systems in civilization as a paramount factor to implement the universalizing process of international law in a pragmatic manner. In his idea of universal aspects towards international law, he was able to unveil the spirit of inculcating natural law in international law despite its importance in the application has been waned in contemporary positivistic position of international law jurists and lawyers. Judge Weerantanry always referred to the ancient and medieval philosophical teachings emphasizing natural law as the cardinal virtue of international law. Especially his admiration of Hugo Grotius was solely based on how Grotius attempted to create a bridge between natural legal values prevalent in the medieval era and secular modern needs of 16th century, in fact the vision Judge Weeramantry yearned from his universalizing process of international law was similar to the ideals upheld by Hugo Grotius in his writings.

4. CONCLUSION

In assessing the intrinsic jurisprudence of CG Weeramantry during his distinguished career as a judge of the International Court of Justice and beyond, we need to admit his judicial activism was an outcome of blending international law with many other factors, which was aptly used by him to construct his beautiful dissenting opinions. Nevertheless, the arguments he presented were not merely filled with philosophical insights as most of his separate opinions at ICJ left a great deal of legal facts that compelled him for his position. If someone appreciates former US Supreme Court Judge Antony Scalia for being a great textualist who saved the US Constitution from getting distorted from so called "Judicial Activism", the same admiration should be written before Judge Weeramantry for being a judicial activist in the International Court of Justice who tried to perceive international law from a different perspective in a place surrounded by textualists. Moreover, the ideas developed by him in his opinions at ICJ indicate the versatility of widening the gaze, especially the topics we discussed in this paper such as intergenerational justice, and sustainable development arose from Judge Weeramantry as most insightful issues which were not much concerned by the majority in the Court. Especially in an era where the world was grappling to resolve its anomalies of Cold War memories, the role played by Judge Weeramantry could be regarded as a heroic task and as far as the gravity of his contribution to modern international law is concerned, it is a fact beyond dispute that the notions he brought in ICJ and his writings have paved the path to create more dynamic stances of 21st century international law.

¹² Green Jan Mayen, Judgment, ICJ Reports 1993, p. 38

REFERENCES

- Anghie, A, Chmni. B. (2003). Third World and International Order: Law, Politics and Globalization, Brill-Nijhof, 1st Edition, pp.34.
- Arhjayati Rahim. (2019). Diversion in the Form of Protection of Human Rights. Musamus Law Review, 1 (2), 87-94
- Fitri Pratiwi Rasyid. (2019). Relevance of Law Consumer Protection on Aircraft Post Master Flight Agent. Musamus Law Review, 2 (1), 50-65. <https://doi.org/10.35724/mularev.v2i1.2617>
- Hendlin, Yogi. (2014). The Threshold Problem in Intergenerational Justice, Ethics and the Environment Vol. 19, No. 2, 1-38.
- Holms, Oliver, Posner, Richard (Editor). (1997). The Essential Holmes: Selections from the letters, speeches and judicial opinions, University of Chicago Press.
- Julianto Jover Jotam Kalalo, Chyntia Novita Kalalo. (2018). Legal Protection Against Health Workers in Taking First Aid Medical Measures. Musamus Law Review, 1 (1), 40-52
- Lisa Mery. (2019). The Urgency of Radicalism Regulation in Legal Norms in Indonesia. Musamus Law Review, 2 (1), 1-11. <https://doi.org/10.35724/mularev.v2i1.1216>
- Smith, Stefan, Borough, Van Der. (1998). Legal and Moral Defects of Nuclear Deterrence, Peace and Conflict Studies Quarterly, John Hopkins University Press, 56-123.
- Weeramantry, C. J. (1975). The Law in Crisis: Bridges of Understanding, Sarvodaya Vishva Lekha.
- Weeramantry, C. J. (2004). Universalizing International Law: Developments in International Law, Brill-Nijhoff.
- Yusdar, Y. (2019). Accessibility of Persons with Disabilities in Realizing Elections with Integrity. Musamus Law Review, 1 (2), 105-114. <https://doi.org/10.35724/mularev.v1i2.1198>