According to Silberman (1996), the students should do most of the work. Problem-based, experiential, and inquiry-based learning are the most often cited in K. Tobin & B. Fraser (Eds.), International handbook of science education (pp. 123-129).